Architectural Details

The architectural features of this residence are characteristic of Romantic Italianate style. The residence is a two storey house, asymmetrical in form, constructed with stone foundations and consists of a double storey wraparound porch on its right elevation.

The porch columns are square with their bevelled tops. Diagonal lattice work exists at the base of the porch. The front facade has a dominant front-facing bay. Windows have stone sills and are long, narrow two paned with segmental arches constructed with a masonry header. Bay windows with hipped roofs exist on three sides of the house. The bay window on the right side of the house interrupts the porch.

Basement windows are horizontal in nature, three-paned, with a flattened arch. Decorative eaves brackets line the perimeter of the soffit and interrupt the decorative frieze on all facades. The roof is steep and consists of fishscale slate roof with galvanized hips. A stone cap exists on the chimney.

The masonry has been cleaned, repointed, is yellow in colour, and in excellent condition. The interior features consist of decorative cast heating grills, door and window pediments, and original woodwork. Baseboards are 12 inches wide. Door hinges are made of decorative cast.

The existing garage is in tune with the architectural features of the residence and therefore should also be recognized as part of this heritage property.

Historical Details

This property was acquired in 1885 by Mr. John Dodd with the current structure built by 1892. Mr. Dodd gave the city the parcel of land now known as Athletic Park. In 1906, the property was acquired by Mary and Noah Quance. Mr. Quance was a teacher of Latin and Greek classics at the old St. Thomas Collegiate Institute and later, Principal, from 1898-1909. The building was duplexed in 1922 and served as a nurses' residence for the Memorial Hospital from 1928-1938. The present owner, Mr. Raymond H. Galloway, acquired the house in 1977.
